

How will your organization achieve SUCCESS in meeting the new Joint Commission Emergency Management Standards?

The Yale New Haven Center for Emergency Preparedness and Disaster Response (YNH-CEPDR) understands the challenges healthcare organizations must address to meet changing standards of performance from The Joint Commission and from regulatory organizations such as OSHA, CMS and NIMS. YNH-CEPDR prepares organizations to successfully meet hospital accreditation standards and regulations for emergency management through:

ASSESSMENTS

Designing, conducting and analyzing assessments such as hazard vulnerability analyses, business impact analyses, gap analyses and capacity and capability assessments

PLANNING

Assisting healthcare organizations with development of effective, workable emergency management plans, emergency operations plans, business continuity plans and continuity integration plans based on the outcomes of their hazard vulnerability analysis

DRILLS AND EXERCISES

Developing, facilitating and evaluating Homeland Security Exercise and Evaluation Program (HSEEP) compliant exercises led by a team of HSEEP-trained Master Exercise Practitioners

EDUCATION AND TRAINING

Offering a wide range of Joint Commission, NIMS, OSHA and CMS compliant courses delivered in multiple modalities, designed specifically for healthcare and developed by subject matter experts in emergency preparedness and adult education

The Yale New Haven Center for Emergency Preparedness and Disaster Response can assist your organization in successfully meeting The Joint Commission Standards.
